The Quattro Firm Believes In Female Empowerment

According to the National Women's Business Council, as of 2012 there were 9,932,424 women-owned businesses in the United States, however when it comes to women run law firms the numbers were few and far between. In fact, in 2013 the American Bar Association reported that women make up only 34% of the legal profession, and of those women only 20.2% were partners in the firms. As of April 2015, only 12 of the largest 100 U.S. run law firms have a woman in their highest leadership position. The Quattro Firm strives to make a change in these numbers.

Being an all female firm gives the Quattro Firm a unique advantage when it comes to handling cases and clients. In addition, being an all female firm fills us with a sense of pride and empowerment. We love to support female run businesses and each month we will recognize one female run company in the area.

When you think of inspiration for female empowerment, there is no better example than Christina Worley, owner and founder of Castle Wealth Management. Christina has it all: a successful business, a beautiful family, a happy marriage and so many letters after her name (CPA, etc.) as to make her introduction almost too lengthy to get out. Christina's resume is intimidating to say the least. She's a super woman in her field, both driven and brilliant, and Christina graduated from Wharton at 19. She is a humble, generous and compassionate woman who helps wounded veterans and inspires other generations of women with her amazing, humorous and encouraging stories of success.

Christina originally began the firm of Worley & Worley with her husband after moving to Florida from New Hampshire. It was a state registered investment advisory firm. Her husband quickly left the firm for another opportunity, but Christina was not disheartened or dissuaded from continuing her business. She subcontracted out to do tax preparation with a CPA firm and eventually the CPA firm became a part owner in her business and this gave her more clients. The new firm name was P.F.S. Advisors, which became Castle Wealth Management in 2006. This increase in clients allowed her to begin concentrating on her chosen career of helping with investments. As the owner of her own business, Christina could also focus on her target demographics: women, small business owners and members of the healthcare profession.

Christina chooses to focus on women because she speaks their language. Women are often talked down to and treated as though they do not know what to do with their money. Christina felt it was important to be able to teach women about investing without making them feel unintelligent. She feels it's important to speak to people on their level and to make them feel understood.

Castle Wealth Management is different than its competition based on its ability and passion for giving back to the community. It's important for Christina and her associates to create personal relationships with clients. For widows, Castle sends them flowers on Valentine's Day, and they help clients that want help with buying cars, something many widows and clients children feel they are at a strategic disadvantage with when negotiating with the car dealers. It's through these personal relationships that Christina receives many personal invitations from her clients to events and parties and has never had the need to advertise.

When we asked what the key was to Christina's success, she explained that she thinks it's important to combine a financial education and empathy with a common sense perspective. She is able to teach people how to budget and invest while understanding their position and their goals, but helping them to stay within the grounds of common sense

The Quattro Firm Believes In Female Empowerment

Christina enjoys her success and enjoys seeing other women succeed. She is a trailblazer for all women who want to succeed in a man's world. She finished high school in three years and then went on to finish college in three years. She was only 19 years old and had to consider this when it came to choosing her residence. If she stayed where she was, it would be embarrassing to take clients out and not be able to drink, so she moved to a city (New York City) where the drinking age was 18 to avoid the situation. Christina watched how women were treated on Wall Street. They were told to dress sexy while the male counterparts could simply be professionals. When Christina began her own firm, she enjoyed the dynamics of changing the industry. She celebrates that women can simply be professionals and not have to look like Barbie dolls while doing it. This is Christina's favorite aspect of being a woman in the finance world.

As far as adversity, Christina has had her fair share. Starting a business on your own is tough enough, one must have enough skills to go out on one's own as well as have the drive to continue it once the first obstacles present themselves. A lot of people expect that women will not be as good in the financial world as they are. Christina believes that not only are the women as good as the men, but they are in some cases better than the men because they can relate to their clients on a personal level where the male counterparts are more concerned with the bottom line. Men often stereotype women who come to see them as needing help with their budgets, or needing to be told what to do, while many women just need information to make intelligent choices, and the Jimmy Choos, may be well within the spending plan.

Christina believes that there are certain advantages to being a woman in this world because they are often better at it. Women and men approach things differently. Christina believes that the approach should concern the goals, investments and savings, rather than simply rates or returns. By staying goal-oriented, Christina is able to establish the personal connections with her clients which are the foundation of her success.

When it comes to Christina's personal favorite aspects, she laughed and said "making money!" She elaborated to describe that this is an intellectual game for her. She's a left-brain oriented person who enjoys math.

When we asked about Christina's biggest business victory in her career, she said she is most proud of owning her own firm. She's successful and Castle is successful and that feels good.

While being a successful businesswoman is enough for some people, it isn't enough for Christina. She goes above and beyond with her pro-bono work and amongst others, she assists wounded veterans with their financial planning. Christina explained to us that some wounded veterans who are on disability have been given formerly foreclosed homes from the banks through a special veterans program. The veterans are allowed to keep the homes and fix them up. Christina donates time to help them plan financially in accordance with the program requirements to show they are financially able to afford these homes. Her favorite aspect of this gift was the good feeling that she has from helping the veterans and their families. She feels it's her way to thank the recent veterans for their service.

We were truly inspired by Christina and her story. She's a trailblazer and an all around amazing woman. We asked if she had any advice for other entrepreneurial women and she warned us that women often do not have the self-confidence. As women we always think that we need to be 100% or overqualified for a position in order to go after it. Christina thinks that we should just say "yes" and "fake it until you make it." If the drive is there, you can succeed. If we wait until we're perfectly qualified, then we may miss an opportunity. It's time to simply stand up and go for it. We can make our own way ourselves.

Thanks again to the awe-inspiring Christina Worley of Castle Wealth Management. As a new firm run exclusively by women, we feel that your story spoke to us on a personal level. We hope to have the kind of career that can inspire other women in a fraction of the way that you have inspired us.
